

Franklin D. Roosevelt Takes Oath As 32nd President

PRESIDENT CALLS UPON THE NATION TO RALLY AND MEET EMERGENCY OF THE HOUR; QUICK ACTION MUST ALSO BE GIVEN BY BOTH EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE BRANCHES OF THE GOV'T.

Unless Congress Acts Promptly, President Threatens to Ask for Broad Executive Power to Meet the Crisis

(By International News Service)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 4.—Franklin D. Roosevelt assumed the arduous duty of the Presidency today with the ringing appeal to the Nation to rally to meet the national emergency and a prompt, quick action by the new administration in both executive and legislative branches, and if legislative action is not reasonably prompt, he warned, "I shall ask the Congress for the one remaining instrument to meet the crisis—a broad executive power to wage a war against the emergency as great as the power that would be given me if we were in fact invaded by a foreign foe."

The significance of this statement did not escape the attention of the legislators assembled on the inaugural platform; nor of the scores of thousands who braved the chill March winds to witness the inauguration.

The following, in part, is the text of President Roosevelt's inaugural address:

"I am certain that my fellow Americans expect that on my induction into the Presidency, I will address them with a candor and decision which the present situation of our nation impels.

"This is tremendously the time to speak the truth, the whole truth, frankly and solely. Nor need we shrink from existing present conditions in our country today. This great nation will endure as it has endured, will revive and will prosper. It is my firm belief that the only thing we have to fear is fear, this namely in reasoning, in justified terror which paralyzes united effort to convert retreat into advance. In every dark hour of our national life, a leadership of frankness has met with that understanding and support of the people themselves which is essential to victory. I am convinced you will again give that support to leadership in these critical days.

"In such a spirit on my part and on yours we face our common difficulties. They concern, thank God, only material things. Values have shrunk to fantastic levels; our ability to pay has fallen; governments of all kinds are faced by serious curtailment of income. The means of exchange are frozen in the currency of trade. The withered levels in industrial enterprises lie on every side. Farmers find no markets for their produce; the savings of many years in thousands of families are gone. More important, a host of unemployed citizens face the great problem of existence and an equally great number are toiling with little return. Only a foolish optimist can deny the dark realities of the moment.

"Yet, our distress comes from no failure of substance. We are stricken by no plague of locusts compared with the purposes which our forefathers conquered because they believed and were not afraid. We have still much to be thankful for. Nature still offers her bounty and human efforts have multiplied it. Plenty is at our doorstep, but a generous use of it languishes in the very sight of the supply.

"Primarily this is because the rules of the exchange of mankind have failed through their own stubbornness and their own incompetence. Have admitted their failure and abdicated. Practices of the unscrupulous money-changers has been indicated in the court of public opinion, rejected by the hearts and in the minds of men.

"Money-changers have fled from their high seats in the Temple of our civilization. We aim now to restore that Temple to the ancient truth. The measure of the restoration lies in the extent to which we apply social values more noble than we do monetary profits.

"Happiness lies not in the mere possession of money; it lies in the joy of achievement, in the thrill of creative effort; the joy and moral stimulation of work no longer must be forgotten in the mad chase of effervescent profits. These dark days will be weathered by every class if we realize true destiny is not to be ministered unto but to minister to, ourselves and to our fellowmen.

NEW HOPE AUTHOR FOILS KIDNAPPING OF HIS DAUGHTER

Timely Warning From Neighbor Frustrates the Attempt

ALICE JANET TUDERY

Moran Tudery, Writer, Sees Man Leap Fence; Finds Ladder

NEW HOPE, Mar. 4.—Taking on the character in one of his own stories, Moran Tudery, magazine writer, frustrated an attempt to kidnap his youngest daughter, Janet, 2, Thursday evening.

As in the famous Lindbergh case a ladder had been placed against the Tudery house, just under the bedroom window of the Tudery's little girl. It was the keen eye of a neighbor, passing in an automobile, and quick action in using the telephone that brought the attempted kidnapping to naught.

The wind dimly banged the shutters on the Tuderys' ancient white house that sits on the hills just where Windy Bush Rd. meets Dark Hollow Road, at Naylor's Corners.

Moonlight bathed the palings in the long whitewashed fence. Inside the house a telephone jangled. A man seized the receiver. An excited voice issued from the instrument, crying a warning.

It was thus that Moran Tudery, sprang into action, pursued and lost a lank, dark figure that had placed a ladder against the wall of his home, and frustrated the kidnapping of his youngest daughter.

He told about it yesterday, sitting in the library of the house, at the same time keeping watchful glance on Janet and her older sister, Nancy, who is 4.

Similarities in the attempt at kidnapping to that of the Lindbergh infant, just a year ago, in Hopewell, N. J., scarcely 15 miles from the writer's home, brought an exhaustive investigation by State police of the Doylestown barracks.

The telephone call which came was from a neighbor, who said:

"Take a look around your house. I just drove by. Somebody's lurking about."

Tudery stepped out of the house. In an instant he saw the tall, dark figure, lined against the white moonlight on the paling fence. In another moment the figure fled, scaled the fence, and, dodging among scrubby bushes and in an open field, vanished.

Reconnoitering Tudery discovered the ladder, of a type similar to the one used in pruning orchards, leaning against the wall of the house, just under the window of his youngest daughter's bedroom window.

The ladder had once been used by Tudery as a passage from the second floor of his home to the garret, but more recently it had been left lying near a small frame outhouse used as a garage. At its foot was the single imprint of a size 8B shoe.

The evidences were examined by Dr. John A. Flood, chief Burgess of New Hope, and by Trooper Sawyer, of the Doylestown barracks.

Mrs. Fanny Simonangeli Dies After Short Illness

Taken to the Frankford Hospital a few days ago, Mrs. Fanny Simonangeli, Langhorne Manor, died this morning at 3.40. She had been ill but five days. The deceased was the wife of Americo Simonangeli, and in addition to her husband is survived by three children: Rose, Louis and Etore.

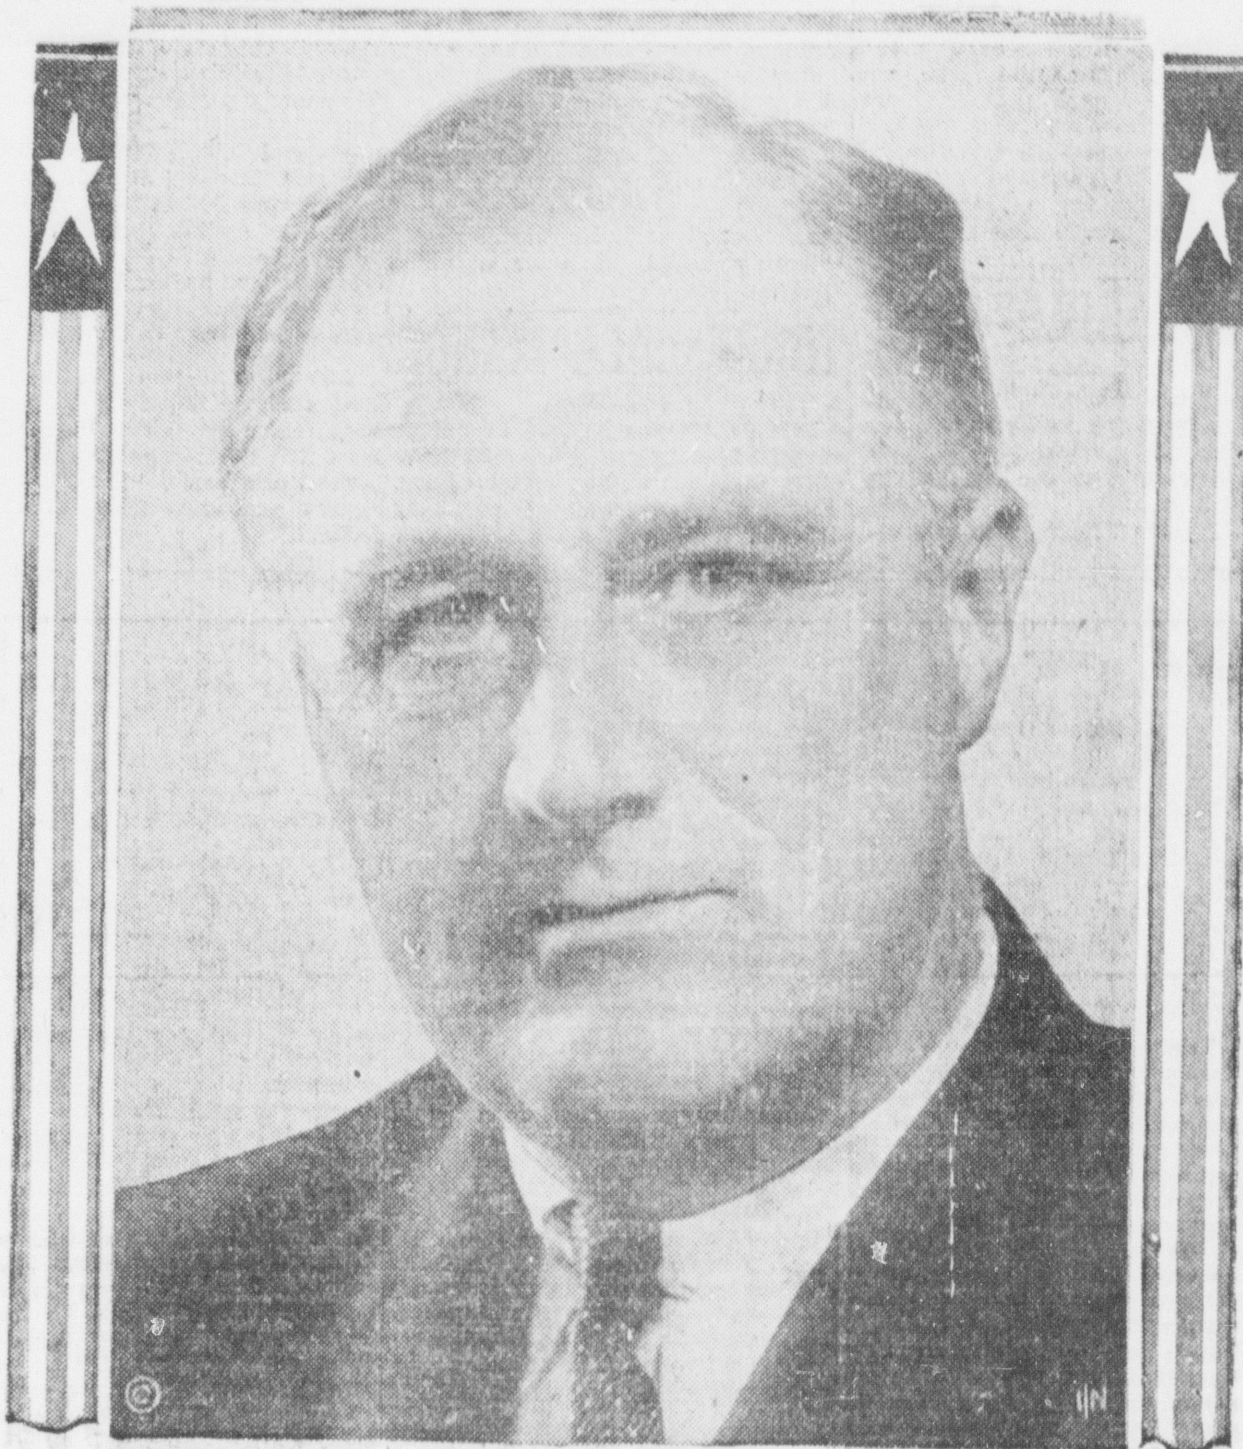

As vice-venerable of the Donna Antonietta Grandi lodge of the Daughters of Italy, here, Mrs. Simonangeli was well known in this section, and she numbered many among her friends. She had apparently been in excellent health until this week.

Funeral arrangements have not been completed. The body was forwarded to the home of the deceased.

SHERIFF'S SALE TO BE AIRED IN CO. COURT

Sale at John Hanzel Farm, in January, to Be Heard

INDICATE LEGAL BATTLE

DOYLESTOWN, Mar. 4.—Announcement was made today that Thursday the spectacular Sheriff's sale of the personal property of John Hanzel, Bedminster township, will be aired in the courts of Bucks county.

The sale, which is on a fair way to become a legal monument to hard times on the farm, took place last January when Sheriff Horace E. Gwiner and Attorney Webster Achey, of Doylestown, representing the plaintiff, arrived at Hanzel's place to conduct the sale. Several hundred farmers were there ahead of them.

Through methods which the Sheriff later branded coercive and intimidating, Hanzel's property was knocked

TWO BARN BURN EARLY TODAY; A LOSS OF $20,000

Eight Horses, 10 Cows, 25 Pigs Perish in Two Conflagrations

ARE NEAR YARDLEY

Fire Marshal Investigating; Both Considered Incendiary

YARDLEY, Pa., Mar. 4.—An aggregate loss of $20,000 was caused when two barns were burned to the ground near here early this morning, cattle, machinery, grain, and other farm equipment falling prey to the flames. Loss in each blaze approximately $10,000, and both are thought to be incendiary.

It was at 2.30 that the barn on the farm of Horace Tomlinson, between Woodside and Langhorne, was discovered afire. In this conflagration four horses, eight cows and a calf, as well as machinery and grain were destroyed. Such headway had been gained when the fire was discovered that Tomlinson and neighbors who quickly came to his assistance had no chance to save the stock.

Yardley, Langhorne, South Langhorne, and Newtown, firemen responded to the alarm.

The second fire occurred on the farm of John Windischmann, one mile south of this borough. The barn on this farm, which is located on the Black Terrace Road, was a total loss. Animal loss in the flames included 35 pigs, four horses and one cow. A truck, a passenger automobile, farm machinery, together with other implements and grain were destroyed.

Firemen from Yardley, Newtown, Langhorne, and the Union and Capitol View companies at Morrisville, as well as a company from Prospect Heights, N. J., hurried to the scene, and were instrumental in saving the residence, chicken house and corn crib.

The fire had made such an advance when first discovered that it was impossible to lead the stock to safety.

A milk delivery man, making his daily rounds, saw an automobile parked near the Windischmann barn at about 4.30 o'clock.

Both fires, it is stated, appear to be of incendiary origin, and Bucks County fire marshal, William L. Stackhouse, Hulmeville, is making a close check-up. The two barns are about six miles apart.

The reflection from the two fires lighted the sky for some time, and many thronged to the sites.

Club Women Will Have Booth, Phila. Flower Show

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society has allotted a space in its annual Spring Flower Show, which will begin March 27th, to the Garden Division of the Southwestern District of Pennsylvania Women. WAYWARD EMOTIONS

Feeling is about all there is to life.

Life is determined by its feelings and some of us are willing to die for feeling.

The common fallacy is that certain lives are emotionless. People take up all sorts of stunts to get a thrill. The thrill comes anyway.

It is necessary, with emotions, to consider the cause and effect. The emotions are not cause, they are effect; they are a symptom. They are caused by our mode of life. If a man will go ahead and do his duty, the proper emotions will come to him.

Emotions run in ruts like all other things. They are the creatures of habit. People think they cannot write, or compose music, without an inspiration. The best examples of creative genius show us that inspiration comes as a result of custom.

Get used to doing a certain thing at a certain time every day and the emotion will come.

Some people are emotion hounds. They are always seeking some new sensation. They are apt to fritter themselves away, because the best kind of emotions follow action and do not precede it.

An emotion is useless unless it leads to some kind of activity. There are people who indulge in emotions, but never translate them into work. Emotions are given us in order to enable us to transform them into deeds, and those who do not transform them, waste them.

The emotions have their police force, which are the inhibitions. Where these are weak in a person he is apt to become a criminal of some sort, and as they are strong he behaves himself.

THE ANIMAL INSTINCT

Man is not so far removed from the animal state but that he instinctively wants to fight when he gets into trouble. Back of the wars in South America and the Orient and back of the revolt in Cuba and the uprisings in Europe is the sorry economic condition of the world. People are worried, therefore beligerent.

It's silly, but the mob is always silly. Like the hog in the bog it always does the thing that gets it in deeper instead of getting itself out. Have the striking farmers improved their lot, or the hunger marchers?

Japan thinks that by fighting China she will find prosperity. The South American republics are fighting themselves and their neighbors because they feel bad over the low coffee and beef prices. Perhaps they think by destroying each other there will be more to go around. The trouble in Cuba probably is due more to the collapse of the sugar market than to the alleged despotism of the Machado government.

Most of the disorders are remote from Washington yet the American government must cope with ramifications from all of them. The next administration at Washington is due for a thorough schooling in international problems. And all because the world finds it impossible to provide every worker with a job and every producer with an adequate market and satisfactory price.

While money may not make one happy, one can be just as unhappy without it.

Ex-Kaiser Can't Return If He Leaves Holland

Doorn Castle was then in great disrepair. Much money was required to reconstruct it. The main building, three stories high, was repaired at great expense, a combined office and gatehouse was constructed at the entrance, servants' and visitors' quarters were built, as well as a large and ample garage.

Many wealthy Dutch families have far more imposing homes than the ex-kaiser, but nowhere are ceremonials so religiously upheld. What Doorn Castle possessed since its beginning was its woodlands, tall evergreens and pines sturdy as the Potsdam Guards, and these trees still are Doorn's greatest distinction.

There is something sadder about the atmosphere of Doorn, the weight of centuries symbolized by these tall trees growing so closely together, the last of the enormous forests which once covered this oldest part of what is now the Netherlands.

(In the next article, which will conclude this series, Mr. Hunter will write about general conditions in Holland.)

Washington Letter

By Harry Ward

WASHINGTON, Mar. 4--(INS)--The United States will have a population of approximately 150,000,000 people after 1960, which will then be followed by a decline after 1970, according to Dr. O. E. Baker, of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Department of Agriculture.

This prospective decline, he asserted, demands consideration by all business concerns in making plans for the distant future. The prospect is "encouraging," he believes, in that during the next quarter century there will be 20,000,000 more people in the United States to be housed, clothed, fed and "entertained."

Population growth, he pointed out, is the principal factor to be considered in studying the outlook for consumption of farm products and many manufactured products in the near future.

Dr. Baker's forecast of cessation of population growth by 1960, and of population decline after 1970, is predicated on a continuing downward trend in the birth rate for a few years and the maintenance of present immigration restrictions.

Should the trend of the birthrate be reversed, or should the immigration bars be let down, of course this forecast would not apply.

"Prospect for population growth in the nation as a whole can be accepted with considerable assurance, but there is less assurance as to population growth in cities," Baker said. "Whereas in the last ten years there was an increase of nearly 15,000,000 persons in the population of the cities out of the 17,000,000 gain in the entire nation, in the next ten years the increase in cities may not be half as large, and even if it be half as large, more than half of the increase will be effected through migration from farms."

"During 1932, when the migration from farms to cities was greatly reduced and the migration from the cities to rural areas increased, there was little, if any, increase in the population of the cities. The increase in urban population between 1940 and 1950, it is expected, will be still smaller than that from 1930 to 1940, and a stationary population not only in the cities but also in the entire nation seems likely by the year 1960, unless the restrictions on immigration are relaxed."

The decline in the birth rate, according to Dr. Baker, has been far more rapid in the cities than on farms. "Ten years ago," he continued, "there were about enough children in the large cities to maintain the population of those cities permanently stationary without accessions from outside, but today there is about a 25 per cent deficit. In cities under 100,000 population there is a 10 to 15 per cent deficit in number of children necessary to maintain a stationary population; but in village population there is a 23 per cent surplus of children and in the farm population a 50 per cent surplus of children above the number necessary to maintain the farm population stationary."

SYNOPSIS

Tom Leach, pirate terror of the Spanish Main, and master of the dread "Black Swan," captures the merchant vessel "The Centaur," bound for England, and kills the captain and crew. Passengers aboard the "Centaur" are Priscilla Harradine, lovely, young daughter of the late Captain-General of the Leeward Isles, Major Sands, her father's elderly aide, who hopes to win her hand and fortune, and the handsome young Frenchman, Charles de Bernis, former lieutenant of the buccaner, Henry Morgan. The latter reformed and is commissioned by the King of England to rid the seas of pirates. He has tried in vain to capture the elusive Leach. De Bernis, known to Leach of old, protects Priscilla by introducing her as his wife, and the Major, as his brother-in-law. He holds Leach at bay with a promise of great wealth in the form of a Spanish plate fleet scheduled to sail shortly. It is agreed that De Bernis will take command of the "Centaur" and lead Leach to the treasure. Despite the fact that he owes his life to De Bernis, Major Sands is hostile towards the Frenchman. "The Black Swan" is beached at Albuquerque Keys where the work of cleaning her hull is begun preparatory for the coming encounter with the Spaniards. Leach and his men live in thatched huts on the shore, but De Bernis and his party stay aboard the "Centaur" at anchor nearby. Leach's lieutenants, suspicious of De Bernis' friendly attitude toward his men, warn their leader that the Frenchman may sail off and capture the treasure himself, leaving them stranded. To prevent this, Leach orders De Bernis and all hands ashore. Priscilla expresses her gratitude for the comfortable quarters De Bernis has arranged for her. Leach is also extremely interested in her comfort. That night De Bernis guards Priscilla's tent.

CHAPTER THIRTY

And now followed arduous days for the buccaners, hard-driven by Leach to the work awaiting them upon the hull of the careened ship. From sunrise until a little before noon, the men worked willingly enough. But when they had dined, they insisted upon sleeping, and let Leach storm and rant as he chose, they would not raise a finger during those torrid afternoons in which the sun beat down so pitilessly, and never a breath of wind came to temper the appalling heat. In this they received a measure of encouragement from the attitude adopted by de Bernis. He was going freely amongst them here ashore, as he had done aboard the Centaur. He would saunter over to the encampment during the afternoon idleness, to laugh and joke with them, to regale them with stories of past deeds upon the Main in which he had borne a part, and, more often now, to fire their fancy on the score of the Spanish gold to which he was to lead them.

It was well for him, perhaps, that Major Sands did not hear him then, or he would have borne reports to Priscilla which must have destroyed her growing trust and confidence in de Bernis.

He painted word pictures for the men calculated to fire the gross appetites which he knew to be theirs, appetites which soon now they would have the means to glut. It might be cruel to toil in this furnace, but soon there would be a golden unguent for their blistered backs. And after all, they could take things easily. There was plenty of time before them. The plate fleet would not be putting to sea for another three weeks or so, and here at the Albuquerque they were within little more than a day's sailing of the spot where it was to be intercepted.

In this manner de Bernis intoxicated them with the prospect of the wealth that would be coming to each of them, and kept it clearly before the eyes of their minds that it was he, and nobody but he, would lead them to it.

Tom Leach, coming to learn that it was largely as a result of the statements made by de Bernis that he found the men mutinously opposed to work during the heat of the day, came raging to him on the subject.

The Frenchman was not perturbed; he was airily platitudeous with proverbs about going surely by going slowly. He exasperated Leach by the opinion that there was plenty of time before them.

"Plenty o' time, ye daft loon? Time for what?"

"Before the plate fleet sails."

"Drat the plate fleet!" swore Leach. "Be that th' only fleet afloat? What of others as goes up and down the seas?"

"I see. You're afraid of being found here? Pshaw! You want to laugh, my friend. Be at ease. No ship is likely to come prowling into this cove."

"Mebbe not. But if any did? What then, eh? Does thee think as I's comfortable here w' ship high and dry, all helpless like? Plenty o' time, says you! Zounds, man! I want to be on my keel again without no loss o' time. So I'll trouble thee not to go putting these daft notions into folks' heads."

De Bernis gave the required promise so as to pacify him. He gave it the more readily because the mischief was already done. Dilatoriness in that tropic heat accorded too well with the men's natural inclinations not to be indulged now that they had de Bernis' authoritative assertion that there was no need for any sweltering urgency.

Apart from that minor explosion from Leach, the first ten days on Maldiva passed peacefully enough.

It was a time that naturally hung heavily upon the hands of Major Sands and Miss Priscilla, and more heavily perhaps on the soldier's than on the lady's. The Major, feeling the heat acutely as a result of his fleshly habit of body, waited in a condition of more or less complete inertness for the passage of time to bring him deliverance. The result of this was that his temper, naturally inclining to irascibility and querulousness, did not improve or dispose him to optimism concerning the future. Miss Priscilla, however, contrived to find for herself some occupation. She busied herself with Pierre in the preparation and cooking of food. She went out onto the reef with him, when he went fishing, and herself joined and found entertainment in the sport. Or she would go for excursions with him into the woods, in quest of yams and plantains, and once she crossed the island with him to its western side by a path which the half-caste had found over a long bald strip of ground reached within four or five hundred yards of the beach; a strip which thenceforward clove the dense jungle like an avenue, where only a thin layer of soil covered the rock, and, ascending towards the island's middle, sloped thence to the western shore, giving a backbone to Maldiva.

Nor did she always take an escort on her excursions. In the early days on the island, she had wandered away by herself, climbing the reef and following the beach beyond it. Along this she had come upon a barrier of rock that rose like a wall some eight or nine feet high to bar her progress. Yet not to be so easily defeated, she had climbed the shallow bluff which rose here above the beach. From the summit, crowned with palms with amotto roses and scarlet hibiscus clustering about the boles, she had looked down into a little rock-bound cove and a limpid, sheltered pool within the embrace of it.

She must have come at least a mile from the encampment. She was quite alone; none ever came this way; and there was no remotest danger of surprise. So she yielded to the cool invitation of that pool, descended from the bluff, shed her light clothing on the sand where an overhanging rock made a sheltering canopy, and dived into the crystalline depths.

She came forth not only refreshed and invigorated, but enheartened by the discovery she had made. Under the friendly rock where her clothing lay, a rook which whilst giving shade was itself still hot from the passage of the sun, she let her body dry in the warm air, then resumed her garments, and made her way back to the encampment. Daily thereafter in the middle of the morning she would disappear unostentatiously and alone. Making sure each time that she was not followed, she went to visit the bathing-pool of her discovery.

The disgruntled Major observing her comings and goings, or listening to her light chatter with Pierre when she was at work with him, or with de Bernis when he came to take his meals in the hut, marvelled that she could endure this state of things with so little apparent heaviness of heart. At moments he would ask himself whether such equanimity in adversity were not the result of an utter insensibility, an utter failure to apprehend the dangers by which she was surrounded and by which the Major was oppressed on her behalf. She could even laugh and at moments approach the borders of pertness with Tom Leach on those occasions, and they were none so rare, when he walked the length of the beach to pay them a visit.

If Monsieur de Bernis was not always there on those occasions, he had an uncanny trick of appearing suddenly amongst them, which the Major thought was just as well, for it saved him from the necessity of joining the conversation with that hawk-faced blackguard. He would sit sullenly by when Leach was with them, and if the pirate addressed him, as he occasionally did, the Major would answer gruffly in monosyllables, outraged in the soul of him that prudence should place him under the necessity of being even civil to such a scoundrel.

It was perhaps fortunate for him that Leach repaid contempt with contempt, regarding the Major as a negligible rabblement without justification to existence save in the fact that he was brother to the delectable Madame de Bernis; though how this should happen, Leach could not begin to imagine. There was, he perceived, little resemblance to be traced between them. He startled them one day by saying so, adding, however, with heavy jocularly, that this was something for which the lady should daily give thanks to her Maker.

He made no attempt to dissemble his admiration for her, even when de Bernis was at hand. Nor did he confine himself to clumsy compliments. His attentions would take the shape now of a few bottles of Peruvian wine, now of a box of guava cheese, or of almonds preserved in sugar, or some other delicacy from the landed stores of the Black Swan.

It pays to read advertisements--- It will pay you to read this one

THE other day a friend gave my wife a recipe for a new Frozen Orange Pudding. We had it last night for dessert.

"This is something new," I said. "Where did you get it?"

"Mae gave me the recipe yesterday. She clipped it from an advertisement."

My wife didn't read that advertisement. If her friend hadn't read it what a treat we would have missed.

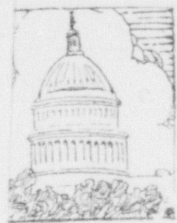

Do you read the advertisements? It will pay you many times over to do so. From them you may learn about all sorts of new things. New foods, new ways to use them, new recipes that will add variety to the daily menu.

Right in the advertisements in this paper there are countless things to interest you, to save you money, to bring you the most value for what you spend. And now as a reward for reading this advertisement here is the recipe that inspired it.

RECIPE FOR FROZEN ORANGE PUDDING

Ingredients. 2 egg yolks (beaten); 1 cup orange juice; 1 cup cream (light cream of top milk will do); 4 teaspoonsful flour; 1/8 teaspoonful salt; 1/3 cup sugar; 1 teaspoonful grated orange rind. Blend thoroughly egg yolks, sugar, flour, salt and add orange juice and cream. Put in double boiler until thick. Add orange rind, cool and pour into freezing tray of refrigerator -- or three or four hours on ice. When ready to serve, top each dish with meringue made by beating two egg whites stiff and adding 1/4 cup sugar. Garnish with orange segments.

Cabinet Wives Differ in Choice of Pursuits

Golf, Boxing, Farming and Snake-Raising Among Hobbies of New Administration Ladies. All Are Equipped to Fulfill Social Obligations.

The wives of members of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's Cabinet certainly cover enough territory as far as their personal tastes are concerned. Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, likes to study international affairs, a hobby which will stand her in good stead in her capacity as hostess to a large circle of foreign diplomats. Mrs. William Woodin, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, is a member of the D. A. R. Needless to say her passion is for anything colonial. Another member of the D. A. R. is Mrs. George H. Dern, whose husband holds the portfolio of Secretary of War. Mrs. Dern's one hope is that "we don't have any wars for the next four years." Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, likes to do her own marketing. Whether or not she will continue the practice, now that she is one of the nation's busiest hostesses, is another matter. The most unique of the Cabinet Ladies is Mrs. Harold Ickes, wife of the Secretary of the Interior, who is a Republican Representative in the Illinois State Legislature and raises snakes for a hobby. The wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, is, like her husband, a keen student of farm problems. She is also an ardent golf enthusiast. Mrs. James A. Farley, wife of the Postmaster General, is a boxing and wrestling fan, having acquired that taste when her husband was Boxing Commissioner of New York State. Mrs. Daniel Roper, wife of the Secretary of Commerce, is a home body, who is never happier than when putting around her own kitchen. In addition to the Cabinet wives, there is Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, only woman cabinet member, who, one presumes, will not be her own hostess.

WASHINGTON, ... — Although the histories of the members of the new Cabinet are pretty well known to the American public by this time, comparatively little is known about the wives of the men who will help Franklin D. Roosevelt to navigate the ship of State for the next four—maybe eight—years.

The Ladies of the Cabinet have a varied assortment of tastes and pursuits, from the old-fashioned home body to the enthusiastic prize fight fan, but all are equipped for the pressing social duties which become part of their daily routine as members of the select coterie on Capitol Hill.

Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the new Secretary of State, a quiet but charming hostess, noted for her "quality" dinners in her own home at Staunton, Va., will have the most difficult job of the Cabinet Ladies. For on her falls the obligation of dispensing hospitality to the large circle of foreign and native diplomats. Mrs. Hull is well versed in international affairs. She frequently corrected her husband's speeches when he served in Congress.

The wife of Secretary of the Treasury William H. Woodin will fit into the Washington scene like a hand into a glove. She is an experienced and brilliant hostess, and is a member of the D. A. R. Another Colonial Dame is Mrs. George H. Dern, wife of the Secretary of War. Mrs. Dern has had a wide experience in the public spotlight, having served as Lady of the Manor when her husband was Governor of Utah. Her one hope is that "we don't have any wars for the next four years."

Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, although patrician in appearance and manners, is not above doing her own marketing. Whether or not she will continue the practice, now that she has become one of the nation's busiest hostesses is another matter.

The most unique of the Cabinet Ladies is Mrs. Harold Ickes, wife of the Secretary of the Interior. For Mrs. Ickes is not a supporter of her husband's party. In fact, she is a Republican Representative in the Illinois State Legislature—and that is independence with a capital "I." Mrs. Ickes' hobby is raising snakes.

There is one amateur gardener among the first flight ladies. She is

Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, whose husband handles the portfolio of Secretary of Agriculture. On one important point Mrs. Wallace differs from her husband. She likes golf, and would play every day. But hubby can't be bothered with the royal and ancient game. Incidentally, Mrs. Wallace is, like her husband, an expert on farm problems.

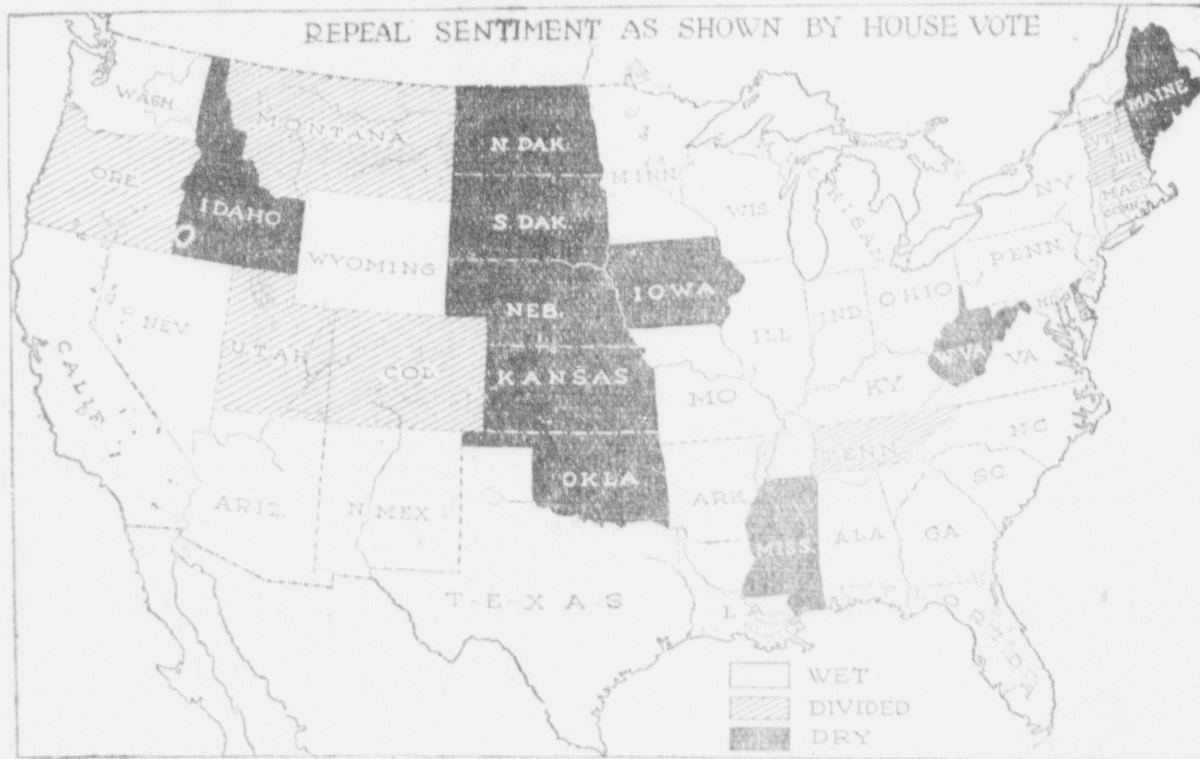

Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, wife of the Secretary of Commerce, is a real home body. She is never happier than when putting around her own kitchen. But for all that, she has a keen grasp of national politics and aided no little in defeating Al Smith for the Democratic nomination in 1924.

Mrs. James A. Farley, wife of the Postmaster General, is the sportsman of the group. As wife of the former New York State Boxing Commissioner, she learned all about boxing and is an ardent fight fan, rarely missing a major bout. She also knows her politics.

In addition to this group of Cabinet Ladies there is Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, who, unlike other Cabinet members, will be her own hostess, marking the first time in the country's history that a Cabinet member has acted in that capacity.

Repeal Battles Loom in Doubtful States

Wets Must Win Six of Eleven Now on Fence to Have Three-Fourths Majority Necessary for Ratification of Repeal Amendment. Dries to Fight "to the Last Ditch."

Although in the first flush of victory, following the passage of the repeal resolution by the House by a vote of 289 to 121, wet leaders throughout the country considered the long fight against prohibition already won, an analysis of the vote by States brings home the fact that a great fight is yet to come before the quietus is definitely put on the Eighteenth Amendment. Thirty States voted solidly wet; eleven uncompromisingly dry and seven divided their votes between wet and dry. In order to ratify the repeal amendment a majority of three-fourths of the States will be necessary. Therefore, the wet forces must hold the thirty already won and in addition woo six more from among the doubtful States. This might not be such a difficult task if the dry forces were to lay down on the job. But this they show no sign of doing. Already the arid leaders are planning ways and means of dominating the State Conventions in these doubtful States and it looks as if a stern battle is in the offing. The wet leaders lost no time in pushing their advantage. A few hours after the repeal resolution had passed the House, twenty-three States had initiated action towards the establishment of conventions for ratification. Special elections of delegates within thirty, sixty and ninety days are provided in most cases.

The ROLL OF HONOR Of The HOME TOWN LEAGUE

Here it is ... in part ... the roll of Honor of the HOME TOWN LEAGUE.

It isn't all here! For the HOME TOWN LEAGUE is composed of shoppers and merchants as well as manufacturers.

You and your neighbor can be Honor Members of this league of people of this community, merely by favoring HOME TOWN LEAGUE products ... the products of the manufacturers listed below.

This is the time to support those who support you. These manufacturers are spending money in this community to produce or to merchandise the goods they offer. They are helping to maintain our homes and jobs by returning to this section the dollars we spend for their products. Directly or indirectly, they are helping to keep us busy.

Leading merchants all over town are supporting the co-operative HOME TOWN LEAGUE plan. They are responsible for watching and selecting for membership these manufacturers who buy here as well as sell here. You can make yourself responsible for buying from the merchants who display the blue and white HOME TOWN LEAGUE emblem in their windows.

"Recognition of the foresight that material wealth is the standard of success goes hand in hand with the abandonment of the false belief that public office and high political position are to be valued only by the standard of pride of place and personal profit; and there must be an end to conduct in banking and in business which too often has given to a sacred trust the likelihood of callous and selfish wrong-doing.

"Small wonder that confidence languishes, for it thrives only on honesty; on honor; on the sacredness of obligations; faithful protection and unselfish performances; without them it cannot live.

"Restoration calls however, not for changes in ethics alone. This nation asks for action, and action now.

"Our greatest primary task is the putting of people to work. This is no unsolvable problem if we face it wisely and courageously. It can be accomplished in part by direct recruiting by the government itself. Treat the task as we would treat an emergency of war. But, at the same time, through the employment accomplishment, create projects to stimulate and reorganize the use of our national resources.

"Hand in hand with this we must frankly recognize the over-balance of population in our industrial centers and by engaging on a national scale in a redistribution endeavor to provide a better use of the land for those best fitted for the land. The task can be helped by a definite effort to raise the values of agricultural products and with this the power to purchase the output of our cities. It can be helped by preventing realistically the tragedy of the growing less through foreclosure of our small homes and our farms. It can be helped by drastically reducing the cost of Federal, State and local government. It can be helped by unifying all relief activities which today are often scattered uneconomically and unequally. It can be helped by national planning for and supervision of all forms of transportation and all communications and other utilities which have a definite public character.

"There are many ways in which it can be helped but it can never be helped merely by talking about it. We must act and act quickly.

"There must be a strict supervision of all banking and credits and investments. There must be an end to speculation with other people's money and there must be provision for an adequate but sound currency.

"These are the lines of attack I shall presently urge upon the new Congress and set the detailed measures for their fulfillment, and I shall seek the immediate assistance of the several States.

"Through this program of action we trust ourselves to putting our own national house in order and making income balance outgo. Our international trade relations, although vastly important, are in point of time and necessity but secondary to the establishment of sound national economy.

"I favor as a practical policy, the putting of first things first. I shall spare no effort to restore world trade by international economic readjustment. But the emergency at home cannot wait on that accomplishment. The basic thought that needs specific action to national recovery is not narrowly nationalistic. In the field of world policy I would dedicate this nation to the policy of a good neighbor; the neighbor who resolutely respects himself and because he does so, respects the rights of others. The neighbor who respects his obligations and respects the sanctity of his agreements in and with a world of neighbors.

"If I read the temper of our people correctly, we now realize as we have never realized before our interdependence to each other; that we cannot merely take, but we must give as well. That if we are to go forward, we must move as a vast loyal army, willing to sacrifice all for the good of common discipline because it makes possible the leadership which means much to larger good.

"It is to be hoped that the moral balance of executive and legislative authority may be wholly developed to meet the unprecedented task before it."

Sheriff's Sale To Be Aired in Co. Court

down for $1.18 and promptly returned to him under a hastily drawn 99-year lease for $1.

Sheriff Gwinner asked the Court to set the sale aside, and the Court issued a rule to show cause why the plea should not be granted.

Next Thursday testimony will be taken before Judges Hiram H. Keller and Calvin S. Boyer when both sides will have the opportunity to present their case.

The Bucks County Farmers' Protective Association, fighting the action of the Sheriff, will be represented by Stace B. McEntee, of Doylestown, and David Levinson, Philadelphia attorney for the Civil Liberties Union and International Labor Defense.

The farmers' protective group charges that Sheriff Gwinner failed to file a sworn statement in connection with his petition to the Court; denies intimidation or coercion, and cites that Attorney Achey himself purchased an expensive cultivator for 35 cents and another large piece of farm machinery for a few pennies.
